FILMOGRAPHY

As a Producer

As a producer, Anil Debnath's first film Porobashi is set to release on 20th February 2026 in West Bengal And 27th February 2026 in Tripura

“Porobashi” is the tale of uprooted lives. In the backdrop of Partition, many were rendered homeless through religious persecution. They themselves remained uncertain—of which land was their country, which faith was their own, and what they could truly depend upon. Porobashi stands as a poignant symbol of those forced to live as tenants within their very own homeland. Alongside this, it carries the heartbreaking journey of a father, enduring the unbearable pain of losing his daughter, yet continuing his relentless struggle to survive.

LOGLINE

When a freedom fighter, Nimai, flees religious persecution in 1960s East Pakistan(present Bangladesh), losing his daughter in the chaos, he seeks to rebuild his life in Tripura. But as tensions rise between refugees and indigenous communities, his only hope for safety and reunion of his family is again challenged by societal conflict.

● SYNOPSIS ●

Facing religious persecution that smoldered East Pakistan (now Bangladesh) in the 1960s, ex freedom fighter Nimai embarks on a perilous journey to India with his family , during which his daughter Asima goes missing. Seeking refuge in the present state of Tripura in the North eastern part of India, they are welcomed and sheltered by an indigenous village led by Puniram. Nimai dedicates himself to teaching the local children. They gradually settle down, clinging to the hope to see Asima some day. Atul grows up, falls in love with and marries Fulmoti, Puniram's daughter, defying familial tensions. Due to the steady influx of persecuted Hindu families, local indigenous communities start fearing a demographic shift. Some of the misguided youth pick up arms against Bengali Hindus , as the social bonhomie is strained. A chance encounter reunites Asima, now living as Amina Begum in Bangladesh, with her family in Tripura. However the joy is short lived , as Nimai's inability to accept his daughter's new identity leads to regrets too late to mend. The social strife between refugees and indigenous communities flare up, leading to a chain of tragic events that devastates Nimai's family. Uprooted yet again, Nimai sets off on yet another journey seeking safety and certainty with surviving member of his family.

Director's Note

Monet Roy Saha

As someone who belongs to a family of displaced people from East Pakistan (now Bangladesh) who found their way to Tripura, the theme of migration, loss, resilience is deeply personal to me. Growing up, I often listened to my relatives share stories of their homeland—a place they could vividly remember but could never return to. Over the years, these memories became part of my own story, creating a bond to a place that I have never seen yet somehow feel connected to. Coincidentally, I came across the producer Mr. Anil Debnath, who also had a similar past, and decided to work on this theme of migration and survival of refugees in the North Eastern front of India.

Producer's Note

Anil Chandra Debnath

I experienced the horrors of religious turmoil in East Pakistan (now Bangladesh) as a child, and it was the fear and uncertainty that led me to seek refuge in Tripura. Those memories of escape, the loss of home, and the strength my family showed have stayed with me. Now, as a settled businessman in Agartala, I felt a responsibility to bring this personal story to life. Making this film with Mr. Monet, enabled me to honor those who made similar journeys. In front of India.

IMPORTANCE

Migrant is someone who chooses to move. A refugee is a migrant who has been forced to move. According to UNHCR, the number of refugees has more than doubled in the last ten years.

FACTS

Some facts to begin with around Indian subcontinent :

- Around 1 lakh - Kashmiri Pandits were displaced from their homeland in the 90s.
- Approximately 10 million - people fled East Pakistan to India during the 1971 Bangladesh Liberation War.
- Around 14 million - people were displaced during the partition of India.

FACTS

As people are forced to flee as refugees, entire cultures, subcultures, languages, and traditions begin to fade, slowly dying a painful death. Upon reaching new shores, the quest to redeem a lost identity begins, but the process is not without immense challenges.

This film explores the Bengali Hindu refugee crisis of the 1960s , particularly the influx of refugees into the northeastern states of India like Tripura, which established a complex relationship with the indigenous communities that offered them shelter.

The aftermath of these events continues to resonate in the present day, often becoming a tool for political parties to exploit existing divisions and stir unrest. This is also a story of hope , of the inherent kindness in humanity and how individuals navigate tragedy , face and react to questions of identity.

● SYNOPSIS ●

A love story between two friends Rabi and Manoj. Rabi was born a hijra (transgender). Because of his gender identity, his family did not allow him to study much, fearing for their social reputation. On the other hand, his friend Manoj left their small town and moved to the city for higher studies. Nobody, except Rabi's family, knew his real vulnerability. In Rabi's household lived his father, mother, younger brother Ranjan, the family servant Debu-da, and Parul. Parul's mother used to work in the house, and after her death, little Parul grew up alongside Rabi and Ranjan. Tired of a long life in captivity, Rabi finally decides to leave home to find Manoj. By now, Manoj is a corporate employee. After losing his parents, Manoj is taken care of by Shikha-di. At the office, Manoj's colleague is Chowdhury-babu — deeply religious, terrified of his wife, humiliated at work during the day, and a devotee of Lord Hanuman by night. Rabi arrives at Manoj's place from the small town. Their old friendship transforms into one-sided love, but Manoj remains unaware of Rabi's gender identity. Meanwhile, Manoj's new boss, MD Barna Madam, falls for him. In the midst of dirty politics, Rabi is forced to leave Manoj's house, with Barna being the main reason. Before leaving, Rabi writes a letter to Manoj, revealing everything about himself. When Manoj returns home, he finds that Parul is pregnant, and the culprit is none other than Rabi's younger brother, Ranjan. To save her family's honor, Rabi takes the blame upon himself and leaves, determined to bring the child into the world. Manoj, on the other hand, resigns from his high-paying corporate job and devotes himself to the welfare of the transgender community. His only witness and supporter is Chowdhury-babu, who eventually quits his own job to stand beside Manoj. Parul gives birth to a daughter named Tuli. But within a year, Parul dies of cancer. Rabi then begins a new battle, raising Tuli. Years pass by this way. Rabi, taking the idol of Ardhanarishvara as witness, embraces the life of a hijra. Before their death, Rabi's parents leave him his rightful share of the property. Greedy for inheritance, Ranjan starts looking for Rabi. In Rabi's absence, Ranjan rapes and kills Tuli — unknowingly committing the heinous act with his own daughter. In vengeance, Rabi kills Ranjan. Carrying his brother's beheaded body, Rabi surrenders to the police. The news spreads across the city. Manoj sends his best lawyer friend, Sumana, to fight the case on Rabi's behalf. Although Rabi had chopped Ranjan's body into pieces and handed them over to the police in a suitcase, he kept the head hidden. Even under immense pressure from the prosecution, Rabi refuses to reveal anything. Police, however, confirm the truth through DNA tests. Finally, Rabi narrates the entire story to the court. In prison, Rabi and Manoj are reunited. Rabi is sentenced to six years of imprisonment. His only wish to Manoj was to build a hospital for the poor. Manoj fulfills his promise and constructs one, planning that Rabi would inaugurate it on the day of his release. But the night before his freedom, Rabi dies of old age and illness. His body is brought in front of the hospital. Manoj, with vermilion on Rabi's forehead, bids him a final farewell. Their love story thus remains unfulfilled — forever incomplete.
